(By A. G. MARRS.)

That Tulsa is entering that period of prosperity that is destined to permanently establish her as the most wonderful city in all of the wonderful southwest, and is entering upon a growth unheralded and almost undreamed of, is the consensus of opinion of observant men.

That Tulsa is now in the most prosperous period of her most remarkable history is evident even to the most casual observer.
Never before has there been such building activity. This activity is not confined to any class, but ranges from ten-story office buildings to residences of the most commonplace type. The report of the building inspector conveyed only in the most hazy manner the true activity in this line. The real accomplishment can only be realized by a trip over the city. Go into any part of Tulsa, West Tulsa or Kendall, and the story is the same. Homes are going up by the scores in every section, while in the business district the sound of the riveter, the whistle of the steam lift, the call of the orders to workmen, all sing the refrain of Tulsa's ever-increasing prosperity. The huge mounds of crushed stone, sand, brick and other materials that arise to mar the otherwise beautiful streets of Tulsa's down-town district are mute evidence to the great activity that is making the Tulsa that is to be.

Reports Prove It.

A glance at the report from the county clerk's office on transfers of real estate will show an activity in Tulsa real estate that is conclusive of the faith men of means have in the future of Tulsa.

These are things in Tulsa's prosperity that we can see, and they establish beyond conjecture the city's present status. But what of the future? Every visitor to Tulsa asks that question.

A well-known banker, who is not an infrequent visitor to Tulsa, who a guest in the city a few days ago, said: "You certainly have a lot to show here, and I have been convinced that it is more than boom conditions in the oil market that is making Tulsa the wonder town of the whole country. It is the spirit of men that is building here this great city, and with such a spirit, backed by an endowment of natural resources rarely, if ever before, enjoyed by any city, there is nothing to cause apprehension over Tulsa's future."

Financiers are natural pessimists, always looking for the hole in the doughnut, and if there were doubt as to the future of Tulsa, there would not be the ready sale for the securities of this municipality. Just a few days ago we saw where the highest price ever paid for Oklahoma municipal bonds was bid for an issue of Tulsa sewer bonds in the amount of $100,000. This bid was made by men knowing the confidence the financial world feels in Tulsa.

Permanent Growth.

To all growing cities there is ever the bugaboo of the town that failed. We are constantly reminded of the fatal boom collapse at Wichita, at Oklahoma City, at Denison, and at Dallas, but have you ever taken a real comprehensive view of the situation at Tulsa as regards the boom conditions that prevailed in these other cities? Do you see traveling real estate agents in every section of the country seeking the dollar of the investor in lots in additions to Tulsa? No.
The activity in Tulsa real estate comes from investors here on the ground, who see in Tulsa the great city that is building. Go into any part of Tulsa and you will find more building activity than you ever saw in any city of its size, but you will not find mile after mile of platted ground, with vacant lots, and only graded streets and cement sidewalks to remind you that it is a part of the city. Take any street and go from the river north to the city limits, and you will find block after block with a house on every lot, and this house will be occupied. Here you will find no overexpansion, but the city has spread out to the beautiful residential districts only as the home building has forced the expansion. It is often the remark of visitors to the city that they have never seen a new city as compactly built as is Tulsa.

Therefore, we repeat the boom conditions that have resulted in disaster and delayed the upbuilding of other towns, which have since recovered, do not obtain here.

Many Resources.

Of course we all recognize the fact that the oil industry is Tulsa's greatest resource, and there is nothing to indicate that there is anything to fear in the future of the oil business in the Mid-Continent field. There is permanency reasonably assured from this source. The agricultural conditions, the backbone of the prosperity of all cities, are as fine in the Arkansas and Verdi-gris valleys as may be found in any part of the west. Tulsa's bread and butter permanency is certain. With the river and an abundance of coal underlying every part of the territory adjacent to Tulsa, the heat and power question is solved beyond any doubt. The railroads, the great arteries of trade, reach out from Tulsa to all section of the southwest, giving ready service, make Tulsa a logical distributing point for all commodities, which with the ideal manufacturing conditions in Tulsa, make only for permanency in Tulsa's prosperity.
